Our Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10, 78.

The small installment of dog days, mixed in with smiling May, remind us of what is coming, and this incipient heated term has had a witting effect upon all social gaiety and fashionable dissipation at the Capitol. The thermometer ranging in the nineties is death to frizzies, puffs and spike-tail coats and is sure to bring an epidemic of white plugs and linen dusters.

There has been unusual activity manifested the last few days at the National Laundry. A remarkable discovery was made down in the everglades of Florida and a very large quantity of Presidential linen was brought to light, which was said to be sadly in need of airing and ventilation. The sanitary welfare of the locality and the political future of the country seemed to encourage immediate action and it was considered a good opportunity to test the renovating and purifying powers of the machine which was to be operated upon well tested politico-scientific principles under the supervision of the most experienced statesmen and manipulators of the cleansing art. Meantime, suggestions are made that in South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi, there could be materials enough furnished to run the National laundry night and day for six months. This startling announcement, has had a quieting and sedative effect upon the enthusiastic manipulators of the machine. There is vigor enough in the country to survive all such spasms of Presidential house-cleaning and washing of dirty linen under the leadership of either political party. Civil service cuts no figure when Ohio is in the neighborhood, and now comes to the front Mr. Wilson J. Vance, a knight of the quill, and a right good fellow, who steps quietly into the vacant shoes of the appointment clerk of the Treasury Department. The brilliant light in the dome of the Capitol may now be seen nearly every night, and the empty seats are the dumb auditors of speeches that are made simply to be printed in the Record, and thereafter pass into the oblivion of forgetfulness, or through the document rooms, to be sent by Uncle Sam to the homes of admiring constituents. Speaker Randall by his casting vote, defeated an amendment to the appropriation bill providing for an increase of the clerical force in the surgeon general's office. This is necessary in order to bring up and settle the ninety thousand pension claims now awaiting adjustment, as the work in the Pension Office is two years behind; it is unfortunate that provision cannot be made for the immediate settlement of every one of these first claims. The opening of the Paris exposition has given to the world another evidence of our national skill and genius. General McCormick with the aid of his assistants, has secured a far better collection of American products than was sent to Vienna, or to Paris in 1877. The public schools of this city have just added to the list, four thousand exhibits of work, by pupils and teachers, consisting of specimens of writing and map drawing, including a plan of a model school building, perfect in all the needed appliances to be erected in this city, and named after Prof. Henry, the distinguished President of the Smithsonian Institute. The list of dead-head commissioners at the Exposition numbers 150, only a part of whom can, under the rules, be accredited to this country, but the Agricultural Congress to be opened will furnish a field of usefulness to all excluded from participating officially in the Exposition. The figures presented there, will show that in 1877, we produced 1,340,000,000 bushels of corn, 360,000,000 of wheat, and raised 9,048,566 hogs, with horses, cattle and sheep, in numbers proportionate. The magnitude of these figures teach a great lesson, while the politicians are disputing about financial theories, resumption or anti-resumption, economy, false or true—reckless inflation—or pinching contraction; nature is silently organizing forces in her mysterious laboratory of the soil, and bringing to maturity a wealth of varied products that will in the near harvest, drop into the hands of the husbandmen untold millions of dollars.

The Antecedents of Disease.
Among the antecedents of disease are: impurity in the circulation of the blood, an unusually attenuated condition of the physique, indicating that the life current is deficient in nutritive properties, a weak, haggard look, inability to digest the food, loss of appetite, sleep, and strength, and a sensation of unusual languor. All these may be regarded as among the indices of approaching disease, which will eventually attack the system and overwhelm it if not fortified in advance. Investigate, then, without loss of time, making choice of the greatest vitalizing agent extant, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an elixir which has given health and vigor to myriads of the sick and debilitated, which is avouched by physicians, and analysts to be pure as well as effective, which is immensely popular in this country, and extensively used abroad, and which has been for years past one of the leading medicinal staples of America. The National Movement.

The press of the country is forced at last to recognize the fact that the "National movement" is no longer to be laughed at. The fact is now called to mind that in Pennsylvania at the election in November, 1876, the Greenback and Labor Reform vote was only 6,000 or 7,000—so insignificant in fact that politicians took no notice of it. At the election in November, 1877, the new party polled 53,000—about 10 per cent. of the total vote cast. The leaders of the new movement had been quietly organizing, and they astonished everyone by the strength of their forces. The new party has been growing and expanding ever since, and a correspondent of the New York Times says that from what he has heard from the most astute politicians of the two old parties, he has come to the conclusion that the Nationals will poll 150,000 votes at the next election. As the two old parties are very nearly equal in strength in Pennsylvania, the Nationals will hold the balance of power. If their vote is shrewdly handled, they may be able to say who shall not be governor, and indeed they may compel either one of the opposing parties to endorse their own candidate. Their action will also have great weight in the choice of the lower house of the legislature, and as Pennsylvania elects a United States Senator next winter, the importance of 150,000 votes spread all over the State can be easily appreciated.

It is not only in Pennsylvania that the National movement is a disturbing force in politics. The new party has already begun to attract attention in Maine. In Massachusetts there is the nucleus of an organization, and the conditions are very favorable for its rapid growth.

Close observers predict a comparatively large National vote in New York at the next election—perhaps a vote large enough to hold the balance of power. In Michigan and many other western States the National movement has taken a very firm hold. It has been able to carry elections in counties, towns and cities. This little cloud of a couple of years ago has now almost, unnoticed, overspread the whole political heavens. The National movement, with its silent organization and its thrusting of unknown men to the front, threatens to upset the calculations of some of the shrewdest politicians in the country.

Here in Missouri the Nationals are working secretly and silently. No one knows exactly what to expect from them. We shall be better able to form a correct judgment when we see their representative men in convention at Sedalia. If they are as strong as has been represented and are growing as rapidly as they have grown in the past few months, they will poll at least 50,000 votes. To this may be added several thousand grangers who will support the National ticket. This force, with a solid Republican backing, would knock Bourbonism into the middle of the last century.

In anticipation of possible Indian and Communistic troubles this summer Representative Latham, of New York, introduced in the house this morning a joint resolution authorizing the president to increase the army to 75,000 men during the congressional vacation. No harm can result from the adoption of such a resolution, provided congress is convinced that the authority thus vested in the president will not be injudiciously exercised. Thus far, however, the idiotic expressions of the few fanatics who aspire to the leadership of the Communistic element in this country can not be safely construed as indicative of a serious revolution, and there is no apparent necessity yet of a declaration of war. A liberal expenditure of money in the prosecution of public works, thus giving employment to the workingmen this summer, would accomplish more in the direction of suppressing communism than could be done by a million soldiers.

Fox Dogs.

Reynard goes wooling in February, and travels far and wide in search of sweet hearts, toying with every vixen he meets, but faithful to none, for his love is more fleeting, than the tracks he leaves in the drifting snow. In April, the vixen having set her house in order by clearing it of rubbish, brings forth her young—from three to six or more at a litter. The house is sometimes a burrow in sandy soil with several entrances; sometimes a den in the rocks; and sometimes in old woods, a hollow log. In four or five weeks the queer little pug nosed cubs begin to play about the entrance. The mother hunts faithfully to provide them with food, and may sometimes be seen on her homeward way with a fringe of field mice in her mouth. About the entrance to the den may be seen the wings of domestic poultry, wild geese and grouse, and the legs of lambs—the fragments of many a vulpine feast.

It is a curious fact, and one I have never seen mentioned in print, that while the cubs are dependent on the mother, a hound will only follow her for a few minutes. Of the existence of this provision for the safety of the young foxes I have had ocular proof, confirmed by the statements of persons whom I believe. In June, 1863, an old vixen was making sad havoc with one of my neighbor's lambs, and an old fox hunter was requested to take the field in their defence. He proceeded with his hounds (tolerably good ones) to the woods where her burrow was known to be, and put the dogs out. They soon started her and ran her out of the woods, but greatly to the surprise of the hunter they returned in a few moments, looking a shamefaced as whipped curs, with the old fox following them. Disgusted with the behavior of his own dogs, he sought the assistance of an old hound of celebrated qualities, belonging to a neighbor. She was put out with the other dogs, with just the same result.

The vixen was at last, shot while she was chasing the hounds, who then turned upon her, biting and shaking her as is their wont when a fox is killed before them; but my friend, the hunter, told me they were as sick and distressed as ever dogs were after an encounter with a skunk. About the last of May, 1875, I witnessed a like incident. A staunch old hound of my own having accompanied me on a fishing excursion, started a fox in piece of wood where a litter of young were known to be. Anxious to preserve the litter for sport in the fall, I hastened to call the dog. I found him trotting along with lowered tail, the vixen lies urly trotting not more than five yards in advance, stopping every half minute to bark at him, when he would stop till she again went on. I called him as easily as if he had been nosing for a mouse, though under ordinary circumstances it would have required a vigorous assertion of authority to have taken him off so hot a scent.—Scribner's Magazine.

Wool Wanted!
Jeans, Flannels and Stocking Yarn, given in exchange at the Rolla Woolen Mills for Wool.

Colds.—Many of the colds which people are said to catch commence at the feet. To keep these extremities warm, therefore, is to affect an insurance against the most interminable list of disorders which spring out of a "slight cold." First, never be tightly shod. Boots or shoes, when they fit too closely, press against the foot and prevent the free circulation of the blood. When, on the contrary, they fit with comparative looseness, the feet gets fair play, and the spaces left between the leather and stockings are filled with a comfortable supply of warm air. The second rule is, never sit in damp shoes. It is often imagined that unless they are positively wet it is not necessary to change them. This is a fallacy, for when the least dampness is absorbed into the sole it is attracted nearer the foot itself by the heat, and perspiration is dangerously checked. Any person may prove this by trying the experiment of neglecting this rule. The feet will become cold and damp after a few moments, although on taking off the shoes and warming them they will appear quite dry.

Iron. Thomas Allen, president of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern railway, has tendered the State Press association an excursion to New Orleans on the 24th inst. Mr. W. C. Bacon, corresponding secretary, has accepted the favor on behalf of the association.
